MET POLICE TO RECRUIT STRAIGHTS

Teaching of heterosexuality fails to pass Lords bill.

“a licence for older men to prey on your girls declares out of touch law lords”

For the second time disgruntled Law Lords has blocked a move by the government to pass the law which would free up schools and educational institutions to have the teaching of heterosexuality as part of its social curriculum. In a close vote where a rebellion was led by Lord Somerville to scupper the government's plans at the last stage have caused outrage amongst heterosexual groups across Britain. The move has been called 'outdated, prejudice and out of touch with a changing country' by London Mayor, Ami Le May who has long been a supporter of straight rights.

In Nottingham there were scenes of anger and dismay from the city's large straight community who felt let down by yet another defeat by the Lords. This is the third year in a row that the bill has hit problems at the last stage due to a small but determined members of the upper house who seem determined to keep their own heterophobia as part of British law. The Sheriff of Nottingham, himself one of the highest 'out' straight people in public office hit out at the decision: "It beggars belief that in this day and age when so much has changed in terms of law and equality against straight people that there is still a spiteful number of Lords who our out of touch with such an important part of our community." The news will only fuel debate that Law Lords should only be able to serve a minimum term of office in much the way that the United States Senate does.

For two long Law Lords have been handed down their life long privilege which seems out of touch with today's more open and tolerant country. Other members of the straight community had their voices heard with Gary Bushell appearing on This Morning Programme to launch a scathing attack on the chambers of Westminster and the age old institutions that keep them there. Mr Bushell, a life long supporter and campaigner of straight rights challenged the Law Lords to resign: "These silly old buggers have got their heads in the clouds.

Its age old, gentlemen's homosexual institutions that no longer have a place in modern society. How can we claim to be Europe's most forward thinking country when there are still relics of a by gone age dusting themselves down at the palace of Westminster."

It looks like the bill will have to be overhauled and taken to the European Court of Human Rights for it to be pushed through via the backdoor. It's expected that the case will be put to Judges in Brussels as early as next May in order that the decision be reversed.

Designer babies on their way

Being able to choose the sex, build, eye and hair colour of babies will soon be a reality from next year. All clinics will be licensed to offer the new treatment after a ruling in the high court. However some straight groups fear that gay couples will deliberately choose not to have straight children which could lead to an overall drop in the percentage of breeders in the UK and the end of a minority culture.

Straight hate crimes on the rise

For the second year in a row violence against heterosexuals has increased according to statistics out today. It shows a 7% rise up on last year. However critics hit out saying that the rise was due to new methods of reporting and logging crime over the regions rather than a rise in hate crime.

Pub brawl leaves straight bar man injured

A fight in Manchester's straight district has left a man with server facial lacerations needing over twenty stitches. 34 year old Peter Stringfellow was hit in the face with a bottle after getting into an altercation with a customer over a spilt drink. A 29 year old man was arrested and due to appear in Court next Wednesday.
